

Stacey Aviva Flint

Director of Education and Community Engagement, Jewish Federations of North America

Stacey Aviva Flint is a nationally sought-after speaker/lecturer, urban planner, philanthropist. She serves as the Director of Education and Community Engagement for the Jewish Federations of North America. Stacey Aviva's core areas of focus over a 25-year career are combating racism and antisemitism, Black/Jewish Relations, and strategic planning/capacity building around cultures of Belonging and Jews of Color. Stacey Aviva is passionate about shared humanity and the histories of self-determination movements such as Zionism and Pan-Africanism.

With a career spanning 25 years, Stacey Aviva's professional career began as the Policy Director for Chicago's Jewish Council on Urban Affairs (JCUA), combating racism and antisemitism and advocating for housing reform, criminal justice, immigration reform, and Jewish/Black American dialogue, along with over a decade specializing in urban economic development overseeing the construction and financing of Affordable Housing, mixed-use spaces, Brownfield Redevelopment, and New Market Tax Credit financing in minority communities. She has designed engagement strategies for synagogues, Jewish education, and civic institutions.

Stacey Aviva serves on the Boards of The Hadassah Foundation, Kamocho, and JFS Colorado. She also serves on the Jewish Life committee for the Rose Community Foundation, the Advisory Board for the Nightingale of Iran Curricula, and the UpStart Council on Innovation and Entrepreneurship.

Her writings have been featured in The Forward and her blog at the Times of Israel, her Eli Talk, Kahal Amim-Many Faces, One Community, has been viewed 2,000 times.

Education

MUPP, Master of Urban Planning Public Policy, University of Illinois at Chicago

Certificate of Jewish Leadership and Adult Jewish Education–Spertus Institute of Learning and Leadership

B.A. Political Science/Jewish Studies, University of Cincinnati